Look out for information about forthcoming parent/carer workshops in your child's school, on their website / in the school newsletters.

Tips for a neuro divergent Christmas holiday

Tracey Jones - Education
Mental Health Practitioner

Big holidays bring with them changes in routine, expectations and social demands. For some children and adults, the temporary decorations and traditions around food, family and gifts can be confusing and even distressing. Every brain and body needs different things to feel safe and included e.g. the toddler may want dim lights and calm spaces, the teen may want to know plans in advance, and grandparents may have definite ideas about who sits where for a special meal.

Being curious, compassionate and willing to accept that there is no ‘correct’ way of enjoying the holidays can turn an overwhelming, exhausting experience into one that feels supportive, connected and just right.

If you want to explore ditching expectations about what the holidays look like for your family, setting boundaries that respect everyone's needs and new ways to transition back to normal life after the festive season, the free resources below are a good place to start (suitable for everybody, particularly helpful for neurodivergent people).

Thanks Karen, for your wise words on emotional regulation

Let's Get Curious About Hot Feelings

When our Mood Booster team go into primary schools we often hear children share that sometimes our homes can feel a bit loud, busy, or full of big 'hot' emotions. Sometimes big emotions can be difficult to manage – especially on a morning – things can get heated. We can work together with children to become Emotions Detectives- to help them manage well even when their feelings heat up quickly and seem like they are taking over.

- ✓ Curiosity Over Control: Encourage exploration of emotions together – you are an Emotions Detective too
- ✓ Creative Coping Together: Discover calming techniques with your child.
- ✓ Offer Options: Help children choose calming activities.

Instead of trying to 'fix' a feeling, or to try to force it away – choose ways and times to explore it together.

Stay Present:

- Use grounding techniques like walking outside and noticing what's around us, or focusing on physical sensations.
- Use visual aids like a feelings chart or scale or pictures of facial expressions to help children learn ways to identify or express intensity of emotions rather than simply naming them.

Soothe the Nervous System:

- Gentle distractions (sensory play, storytelling)
- Cold sensations (cold drink of water, cold cloths, eating frozen tube of yogurt or a cold hand against the forehead or a set of cold keys behind the neck)
- Use a breathing technique with your child (e.g..., hand-breathing, belly-breathing) Comfort and connection
- Encourage calming activities: coloring, music, water play, cuddling.
- Respect their preferences (for example: lying upside down on the couch).
- Support their preferred interests, (hobbies and interests)
- Maintain simple, steady routines with flexibility. When new things need to be added to their routine – do trial runs on weekends or holidays

Positive Communication

- ✓ Use kind words.
- ✓ Praise small wins and efforts.
- ✓ Avoid comparisons with other children or parents/carers

The Clothing Bank FIM MHST Donation Station

We have our very own Clothing Bank donation station. We used this to collect donations from our team for The Clothing Bank Christmas Appeal. The appeal is to help give each Child / Young Person who is supported by the Clothing Bank a brand-new outfit and pyjamas for Christmas, this also includes things like socks, underwear and toiletries. Our team donated a mammoth amount of pre-loved clothing in September, our biggest donation yet. All thanks to the generosity and passion of the team. Check out the amazing work the charity does

A Good Night's Sleep Without the Online Gamble

We know that sleep deprivation is an ongoing issue for the children and young people that we support, and their caregivers.

We have recently noticed a worrying trend of families buying melatonin online, particularly the melatonin gummies.

Purchasing medication including melatonin gummies online is a safeguarding concern. These substances are not regulated. There is no understanding of the actual content or safety of them.

Melatonin can only be prescribed by a specialist doctor and requires specific monitoring and considerations and should only be recommended for short term use.

For more information on how to get a better night's sleep naturally follow this link: <https://thesleepcharity.org.uk/>
